Hey Betty, thanks again – this is looking really promising! I love the tightness of your core concept and it's clear that you have an excellent understanding of your brand and target audience. You also reflect a strong understanding of narrative storytelling structure. I'm really fascinated to see how the interplay between live action footage and AI comes together (and anticipate this being a strong metaphor for inner transformation and self-perception), and it looks like you have a strong hook and CTA lined up, which is super.

I actually don't have a great deal to add, and feel you can proceed confidently with this concept! For the transformation, there might be an opportunity to make it more impactful by showing the beads as the trigger – for instance, as she touches or fastens them, the world begins to shift around her. And in the editorial section, it might be worth keeping a few natural, human details (like a small smile, relaxed shoulders, or a natural walk) so it doesn't feel too artificial. But these are minor details at this point. Overall, sounding really strong and I look forward to seeing it come together!

Key Takeaways

✓ Strengths noted

- Strong, tight core concept
- Excellent understanding of brand and target audience

- Strong narrative storytelling structure
- Live-action / AI interplay recognised as a powerful metaphor for inner transformation
- Hook and CTA both in place

→ Suggestions for improvement

- Make the waist beads the explicit trigger for the world shift — as she touches or fastens them, the transformation begins
- In the editorial/AI sections, retain natural human details (small smile, relaxed shoulders, natural walk) to avoid feeling too artificial

How This Feedback Was Applied

Following Graeme's feedback, the Transformation scene (10–18s) was refined so that the moment she touches and fastens the waist beads becomes the explicit visual trigger for the world shift. The editorial/AI sections were also noted to retain natural human warmth — a soft smile, relaxed posture, and natural movement — to keep the character grounded and relatable even within the stylised aesthetic.
